Not illustrated. 1892 Excerpt: .from September 1,1890, when I entered upon my duties as professor in this university, up to the present date. CLASSES. During the academic year 1890 and 1891 there were five classes under my care as follows: One class of four students in mineralogy, one of three students in geology, one of two students in zoology, one of fifty-six students in physiology, and a class of forty-three students in botany. Besides these five classes, during the last half of the session there was one graduate student in mineralogy. In the study of physiology, geology and botany as well as zoology the microscope was frequently made use of, and in all the subjects the work of instruction was made as practical as the means at hand would allow. The students were required to analyze about one hundred native Utah plants under my direct supervision, and each student collected, dried, mounted and deposited in the university ten different species of Utah plants obtained in the vicinity of Salt Lake City. During the present university year or session, that is, since the opening of the university in September, 1891, there have been five classes in my charge, as follows: Elementary mineralogy, 27 students. Elementary geology, 35 students. Mineralogy and petrography for mining students as well as sophomores and specials, 18 students. Mineralogy, special class for teachers, 2 students. Advanced mineralogy, 2 graduate students. Total number in all classes this year, 84. It is proper here to state that many inquiries...
