To assist organizations in determining what product or service to introduce to the marketplace, a marketing mix formula must be followed. Successful organizational products follow the four main elements of the marketing mix, the four P s: product, place, price, and promotion. In some instances, due to the shift from products to service solutions business strategy, the four P s may be substituted by relevance, response, relationships, and results, the four R s (English, 2000, p.21, 2). More than just advertising, marketing is the procedure that answers the questions of what the needs, wants, fears, and desires of ones target consumers are. Effective marketing is based on understanding a specific audience or consumer segment. Organizations can identify segments based on the attitudes, beliefs, opinions, and values...
