Pursuant to congressional requests, GAO reviewed, in conjunction with the Department of Defenses (DOD) Inspector General (IG), DOD efforts to reduce problem disbursements and its implementation of a statutory requirement to match each disbursement exceeding 5 million to the appropriate obligation before the disbursement is made. GAO found that: (1) DOD reduced its problem disbursements from 37.8 billion to 23.1 billion as of September 1995; (2) DOD disbursement problems persist due to long-standing system weaknesses and DOD failure to comply with basic accounting procedures for validating, reconciling, and reporting transactions; (3) DOD has automated the prevalidation process for the Defense Finance and Accounting Services (DFAS) Columbus Center contract payment system and eight other primary contract accounting systems to handle their large volume of transactions; (4) there are deficiencies in the automated programs for prevalidating Army and Air Force disbursements; (5) DOD has lowered the prevalidation threshold to 1 million for all disbursement centers except DFAS-Columbus; (6) this limited implementation hampers DOD ability to resolve its disbursement problems, since DFAS-Columbus is responsible for about 40 percent of DOD contractor and vendor payments; (7) from July 1995 through January 1996, DFAS-Columbus prevalidated only about one-third of the total dollar amount of its disbursements; and (8) to resolve disbursement problems, DOD needs to prevalidate as many transactions as practical, further lower the prevalidation threshold, and follow basic accounting procedures until it has corrected serious weaknesses in its accounting and contracting systems.
